Task 2

Read this story of a writer's journey in Mexico. Your task is to give short answers (maximum two words) to the questions that follow the text. Write your answers on the dotted lines as in the example.

The Magic of Mexico

As a child, the writer Preethi Nair (author of Beyond Indigo) was struck by a tragic tale of love. Now, she travels to the place where the story began.

When I was little, my father used to tell me stories about Mexico, where he worked in the 1960s. He had travelled there from India, before settling in London. It was the first time he'd travelled abroad, and the contrast was so sharp that it left a lasting impression: he would talk about Mexico at every opportunity.

The Mexico he remembered was full of legends and magical characters, and these have influenced much of my writing. This year, finally, I set out to find the places he told us about. My aim was to go to Oaxaca, 500km southeast of Mexico City, but on my way I wanted to visit a typical Mexican town, and chose Puebla, an hour east of the capital.

A Mexican writer once said, "For Mexicans, colours shout so loudly that you cannot hear the silence of darkness." This is so true. In Mexico City colour is everywhere, from children's green school uniforms to clear blue walls. Only on the outskirts are houses uniform grey. My driver Jose says the poor don't use colour on the outside of their houses. "Colour is symbolic of wealth."

We head out towards Puebla, among the mountains, and Jose points out two snow-covered volcanic peaks. Popocatepetl is tall, while the White Lady is much smaller. As we drive, Jose tells me a Romeo and Juliet kind of story. It is the same one my father told me as a child.

Popo is away fighting, and his fiancée is wrongly informed that he is dead. Heart-broken, she dies. Popo returns, finds her dead body, and remains close by her for ever. Today he is an angry volcano, ready to erupt any moment and, if you look carefully, the White Lady has the form of a young woman lying down.

I arrive in Puebla on Sunday. The buildings are quite magnificent and the town is full of life with musicians playing and people dancing in the main square.

By the end of our journey through the Sierra Madre, we arrive in a dry, red desert area. We reach Oaxaca and head straight into town. The air in the market smells of hot chocolate and freshly baked bread and there are racks of fruit, spices and chillies everywhere.

When I finally come to the end of my stay I find it incredibly difficult to leave Mexico. I understand now, perfectly, why my father could never forget this country.

Task 3

Read this article describing the conditions for becoming a British citizen and then read the sentences following it. Your task is to choose the answers that are nearest in meaning to what the article says. Write the letters in the white boxes as in the example.

Testing passport to UK citizenship

Did you know that you could dial 112 as well as 999 to reach the emergency services? Can you name the dates of St David's and St Andrew's days? And if you can't, are you fit to be a British citizen?

This isn't an obscure pub quiz. From today, new migrants to Britain will be expected to answer 24 similar questions if they are to get a British passport. Most of the 140,000 people who apply for British citizenship every year will not only have to show they have a working knowledge of the English language but also pass a test on their knowledge of life in the United Kingdom.

Migrants need five years' residence in Britain before they can apply for a UK passport. The 20% whose English is still not adequate after this time will have to do a combined English language and citizenship course. The estimated 60-80% of new migrants who do have a working knowledge of English will have to pay £34 to do the 24 multiple-choice question test on British life. The questions are based on Life in the UK, a Government publication that candidates are expected to read. The test covers topics that include the changing role of women, the make-up of the population in Britain, religion, customs and traditions, how the political system works, and the position of children.

The test has a pass mark of 75% and, like the driving test, those who fail can take it again at a cost of £34 a time until they pass.

Teachers of English for speakers of other languages (ESOL) who will prepare new migrants for the tests said they were surprised at how difficult some of the questions were. One ESOL teacher reported that at a recent training day only one of the 20 teachers who took the test passed it.

Task 4

Oi, faster! Scientists develop clothes to push athletes harder

Athletes will try almost any form of physical or mental training to improve their performance. Now they will have another tool in their search for perfection: pushy clothes.

Scientists in the Netherlands have developed sports clothing with built-in sensors to let an athlete know if they are training at their optimum level. The sensors will detect how active certain muscle groups are during training and vibrating pads will send back tactile signals if performance drops, reminding the wearer to work harder in that particular area of the body.

Hendrik-Jan van Veen, who led the research, told New Scientist magazine that "the feedback can be understood by the person much more quickly than if they are getting shouts from a human trainer". Getting faster feedback about their body's performance will mean that athletes will be able to respond more quickly to any changes in their surroundings.

So far, the clothes have only been tested on rowers in a laboratory.

Sensors worn at the ankle and the waist monitored the speed at which an athlete moved and how they coordinated their body movements. If they lost their rhythm, the pads would vibrate at the correct pace to help the athlete get back on track. These reminders could mean the difference between first and second place.

The researchers have also made vests for speed skaters with sensors and vibrating pads at the shoulder and hip.

0) The main goal of all …….. athletes ……. is to get to the top in their sport.

23) In future, a new type of ……..…….. might help them reach this aim. | 23) | | |

24) Recent work by Dutch ……..…….. has led to this new development. | 24) | | |

Task B

You are a regular reader of the Internet forum "Teen Advice Online". You have found the following problem there and decided to give your opinion:

> I have a little sister who is only 12 years old and she shoplifts A LOT! Every time she comes home from the mall she has like hundreds of dollars' worth of jewelry and stuff.
>
> I am starting to hope that she will get caught or she won't stop. Is there a way I can get her to stop without getting her into a lot of trouble? Or should I just tell my dad? Or blackmail her to stop? I NEED HELP! Please email me back soon. Thanks for reading my letter.
