Task 2

Read this article on flying. For each statement choose the option that is nearest in meaning to what the article says. Write the appropriate letters in the white boxes next to the numbers (11-15) as in the example (0).

Happy landing in Hong Kong … virtually

The skies are safe. Cath Urquhart, Times travel editor, tries to fly a jumbo but never leaves Gatwick

The airport runway lights blinked up at me out of the darkness. Below me were the inky waters of Victoria Harbour, and beyond, the skyscrapers of Hong Kong island, twinkling in the night. I had been intending to land on the runway, but alarmingly, it was crossing my screen from left to right instead of top to bottom. At this rate it looked as if I would shoot across it and end up in the harbour.

"Ease her nose up," instructed flight engineer Ray Maidment, admirably keeping the panic out of his voice. I pulled the control column towards me, and turned it to the right to set our course for the runway of Kai Tak airport, one of the trickiest approaches in the world. The lights seemed terribly close, the runway terribly short. Would we land safely − or would our Boeing 7-47-200 plough into the murky harbour waters?

Climbing from the flight simulator's cockpit ten minutes later, I felt pleased if a bit dizzy. We had landed so softly that no one in Virgin Atlantic's upper class would have spilled a single drop of champagne. "For a first-timer, that was exceptional," Ray said kindly.

Ray has landed at Kai Tak more times than most, if you count actual and virtual landings. After 42 years as a flight engineer with BOAC, then British Airways and Virgin, he has semi-retired and now instructs enthusiasts and would-be pilots in a flight simulator used by Virtual Aviation.

The company was set up last year by James Stevenson, a 24-year-old entrepreneur and aviation enthusiast. "We get people from all walks of life trying the simulator," James said. "One person bought 15 hours to give to business colleagues, some are celebrating birthdays. Others can fly light aircraft and want to see what it is like to fly a jumbo. The more experience they have of flying the more they can do in their session − for example fly into turbulence."

Task 3

Read this article on water shortages in Australia. Your task is to fill in the gaps in the sentences (16-22) according to the information in the text. Write one word only on the dotted lines. An example (0) has been given for you.

Water shortages, undrinkable tap water, showers rationed: welcome to Australia

Once it was Australia's best grazing land. Now, after four years of drought, the rolling hills around the agricultural city of Goulburn are bleached and lifeless.

Farmers are unable to keep livestock (sheep or cows), and water rationing has been imposed. The water that dribbles from the tap, dredged from the bottom of an empty reservoir, is considered unfit for human consumption.

Goulburn, with a population of 22,000, is close to running out of water. Unless there is significant rainfall over the next few weeks, the city's Pejar Dam, which normally contains nine billion litres of water, will be drained of its last drop. While small Australian communities of a few hundred that have run dry have survived by trucking in water, Goulburn's thirst for one million gallons a week is too large.

And as anxious Goulburn residents look to the skies and pray for rain, those living in Sydney, Australia's largest city, only 125 miles away, are preparing themselves for severe water rationing. Sydney's main reservoir is already 40 per cent below capacity.

Australia, the world's driest continent, is accustomed to emergency measures to prevent the taps from running dry. But even for a nation used to drought, the lack of rain across much of the eastern seaboard is raising serious concerns. For the first time in memory, large urban communities face having no water to drink.

In Goulburn, a city that owed its prosperity to the livestock trade, the best-known landmark is a statue of a giant Merino sheep. But the agricultural-based economy has been hit hard, with key employers recently ordered to reduce water consumption by 30 per cent. Homes are being allowed to use only 40 gallons (180 litres) of water per resident a day, the equivalent of a ten-minute shower.

Adding to Goulburn's concerns are signs of a developing El Nino weather pattern, caused by fluctuations in ocean temperatures, which is believed to worsen drought conditions in Australia.

Task 4

Teaming with bright ideas

Better ways of working together

Companies are eager these days to emphasise that they are organised around teams. A recent series of advertisements for Microsoft featured teams of employees from the giant software company getting excited about the various projects on which they were working together.

Headhunters are increasingly being asked to assemble teams of top executives, not merely to find a single high-performing CEO (Chief Executive Officer). And the bosses themselves are expected to be good at putting together teams.

The speed and efficiency with which effective teams can be brought together to resolve problems is crucial to success in the modern organisation. A recent Harvard Business Review article explains how teamwork within Linux, the software company, managed to build a barrage to protect the system against a virus that had breached a vulnerable spot: "Despite the need for the highest security, a group of some 20 people, scarcely any of whom had ever met, employed by a dozen different companies, living in as many time zones and straying far from their job descriptions, accomplished in about 29 hours what might have taken colleagues under the same roof weeks or months."

The authors of the article argue that Linux was more successful at resolving the problem than its more conventionally structured rival Microsoft would have been. They describe the Linux people as "virtuoso practitioners of new work principles that produce energised teams and lower costs."

But it is not only geeks in the software industry who have learnt to work in this way. The article says that the management methods of Toyota, the company that invented "lean manufacturing" (the remorseless elimination of waste) resemble the methods employed by the Linux community. One stroke of genius at Toyota was to apply the principles of lean manufacturing to inventory. What could be more wasteful than having shelves piled high with supplies that were not going to be used for weeks or months?

This gave rise to the "just-in-time" method of stock control. Toyota realised that the best way to make this system work was to allow the workers on the factory floor to control the flow of supplies because they had the information that would keep stocks at their lowest. This forced Toyota to decentralise decision-making and, unlike most Japanese companies, empower its shop-floor workers.

Task A

Your British friend, Nigel, has sent you an advertisement about a volunteer project which he would like to take part in. He wants to know if you would be interested in going with him in your summer holidays:

Orangutan Foundation Volunteer Programme

The Orangutan Foundation's Volunteer Programme was established in 2000 in Tanjung Puting National Park, Kalimantan (Indonesian Borneo). Our programme is like no other and promises some exciting opportunities for adventurous individuals; not only do volunteers participate in conservation fieldwork, they also get a chance to see orangutans in their natural habitat.

The main target area of the programme will be the Foundation's release site for rehabilitated orangutans. Here we need help to build a new release camp to allow us to reintroduce more orangutans from our Care Centre.

Previous experience in the field is not necessary. You must be in good health and prepared to undertake manual work. Living conditions are basic and very remote. Each volunteer team runs for a set period of six weeks.

Note: Participants on the Volunteer Programme will not have direct contact with orangutans.

Write a letter of about 130 words to Nigel in which you tell him:

- What you like and what you don't like about the project
- Whether you would like to take part or not and what your reasons are
- If you need any further information to decide

Begin your letter like this:

Task B

You have recently found an online forum called Test-taking problems on the Internet. You have found the following letter and decided to give your opinion:

> I am usually a pretty good student. When I was in sixth grade and below I had no problems getting A's. I'm in the 7th grade now and I'm doing so badly! It's not the class work, or even homework. I understand the stuff we do. It's when we take tests that I do badly. Is it possible for me to understand the school work, but just do poorly on tests? Because I get nervous and worried when I'm about to take one? I'll be getting my report card soon, in 2 weeks. Is there any way for me to still get at least a B? I care about my grades and I'd appreciate any advice. Thanks.
