Fontos tudnivalók

- Az utasításokat pontosan kell követni. Csak az utasításban megadott helyre beírt megoldás fogadható el.
- Mindig csak egy megoldást szabad beírni.
- A betűjelek legyenek jól olvashatóak, az esetleges javítások pedig egyértelműek.
- A megadott szószámot nem szabad túllépni. Az összevont alakok egy szónak számítanak (pl. "it's" egy szó, "it is" két szó).

Task 1

Read the descriptions of four museums and the statements following them. Your task is to match the statements 1-9 with the descriptions A-D. Write the letters in the white boxes. An example has been given for you.

A)The Natural History Museum The skeletons of reptiles are very good, and the new display of T-Rex is excellent.

The Insect Room is definitely not for people easily scared by bugs and spiders. The Ecology Gallery, the Mammals Gallery, the Mineral Gallery and the Earth Gallery with a 17-carat diamond and an emerald the size of a lemon just call out to you!

At the end you will be presented with "Earth Today and Tomorrow", where you can see what we are doing to this planet. Pollution and the destruction of Mother Earth are shown here. Open: Mon-Sat 10am-5:50pm, Sun 11am-5:50pm. Tel: 0207 942 5000.

B) Theatre Museum - Old photographs, programmes, costumes, letters and cartoons give you a story about the past. It doesn't take long to see everything here so if you have a few spare minutes, go inside; otherwise stay out and enjoy the weather! Open: Tues-Sun 11am-7pm. Tel: 0207 836 7891.

C)Transport Museum A museum for enthusiasts, though it is also popular with children. The history of London's transport is, we suppose, a history of the World's urban transport as well. Admission fee fairly high considering the size, but the exhibits are crammed into the building. Great shop selling Underground branded goods which make perfect presents. In Covent Garden Piazza. Open 10.00-18.00 daily (11.00-18.00 Fridays). Free admission for children.

D) The Victoria & Albert Museum A huge museum of culture. What's fascinating about the British Galleries is the closeness of the objects – lots are there to be touched, – anyone who's ever bought a sofa, wallpapered a room or chosen curtains will like the displays. There are several rooms with computers, AV displays and book collections.
Tours are free, and you can even borrow a lightweight folding chair to take round with you. Kids seem to love the hands-on stuff (e.g.: dressing up in old costumes, building pieces of furniture, designing their own monograms and seeing them put onto cutlery, weaving oriental carpets). Spontaneous concerts in the entrance hall on Sundays.
Open 10.00-18.00 daily; on Wednesdays and the last Friday in the month open to 22.00.

0) Tickets to the museum are quite expensive.	0)	C
1) You can see dinosaurs there.	1)
2) If you only have a short time this is a good place to visit.	2)
3) Visiting the museum is only free for children.	3)
4) On some days the museum is open till very late.	4)
5) You can buy great souvenirs in the museum.	5)
6) The museum cannot be visited on Mondays.	6)
7) At weekends you can listen to music in the museum.	7)
8) The museum offers lots of different activities for children.	8)
9) If you want to learn about environmental problems, you should visit the place.	9)

- Consider staying in a business district. Since business travellers aren't around during the weekend, hotels in business districts have plenty of available rooms on Friday, Saturday, and Sunday nights and usually offer discounted rates.

15)

A the lower the fare you're likely to find.

B it may cost less ultimately to book it for a full week.

Question time

There is a growing need to find answers to lots of different types of questions, and thousands of people are ready to pay for instant-reply services.

A company called Any Question Answered (AQA) offers an open-all-hours service, charging £1 for each question and responding to about 80% within five minutes.
At present, the service is answering an average of 8,000 questions per day - with replies written by a team of 500 part-time researchers.

So what makes people want to use this pay-as-you-know service?
The peak time for questions is the evening, around the time people might have had some alcohol. And AQA's chief executive, Colin Myers, says these are usually "male type" inquiries.

"Some people want to tease their friends about what they don't know. Who won a football match? Who scored the most goals?"
"There are other questions which are clearly about settling an argument. Such as 'If a polar bear and a lion had a fight who would win?' Definitely the polar bear.
It can include more specific questions, such as "Who should get the next round of drinks?"
And the fact that the questioners get a response from a human being, maybe with some humour added, means that people are using it as a form of instant entertainment, he says.

About a third of questions sent in by customers have already been asked, says Mr. Myers. And although some topics are excluded, such as medical or financial advice, the researchers try to answer whatever is thrown at them.
"What goes well with orange trousers?" Answer: a purple satin shirt.
If a customer thinks the answer is wrong or they think it's unsatisfactory, they can dispute it and ask for their money back.

AQA is a serious business which aims to give instant information to people on the move.
Mr. Myers used to run a computer company and a mobile-phone technology firm. He believes the huge mobile phone market is providing rich opportunities for new services.

0) You get the answer in written form.	0)	A
24) The service is available 24 hours a day.	24)
25) You must pay £1 for each answer.	25)
26) Everybody gets their answer within five minutes.	26)
27) Most of the questions are asked in the evening.	27)
28) The oldest person who called was eighty years old.	28)
29) Any kind of question is answered.	29)
30) Mr. Myers can speak five languages.	30)
