Read this account of a school visit. The paragraphs have been jumbled up. Your task is to put them back in order. Write the letters in the white boxes as in the example. Remember that there is an extra paragraph that you will not need.

Top class children

Last week I took a group of lively 9-year-olds to nearby Berkeley Castle. I felt that all were as well prepared as possible.

0) _____

1) _____

2) _____

When I asked them why, they replied: "We are not stepping on that carpet, Miss. Like you said, it's old and we'd spoil it."

3) _____

All through the visit they behaved perfectly. Even when the guide told them that they could step over a rope to get a better view, they didn't until I assured them that it was all right.

5)

A She led the way up the wide, main staircase, walking in the centre of the carpet. To my horror, my group formed themselves into a line, one behind the other, and crept up the very edge of the wooden steps.

B I pointed out that this particular carpet was not one of the antiques, but was told: "Ah, but it will be one day."

~~C~~ I had talked about Edward II, had stressed the antiquity of the castle and all its valuable contents, and that nothing must be touched without permission. Our guide must be obeyed, so that nothing would be spoiled.

D One child's report read: "I just had my best day ever. We saw lots of things. The lady let us over the barrier to see a special window. In it is a fly caught in some amber. It has been there for hundreds of years. I think it is dead."

E When an anxious parent telephoned later that day, I was able to reassure her that everybody was safe.

F Back at school they needed no urging to make a record of a most enjoyable and instructive day.

G At the entrance we were met by a very kind lady who said that she would take us around the castle and explain anything the children wanted to know.

Task 2

Read this magazine article on Hungarian wine. Your task is to choose the answers that are nearest in meaning to what the article says. Write the appropriate letters in the white boxes next to the numbers. There is an example (0) for you.

Wine
Focus on Hungary

33-year-old Sam Harrop is one of the youngest Masters of Wine in the world (one of just 245). In this monthly column, Sam focuses on Hungary.

Believe it or not Hungary is producing some high quality wines: it's a region that's especially worth a look at if you want tasty wines that don't necessarily cost the earth. There are 22 wine regions in Hungary and the variation in wine styles produced is pretty impressive. From Methode Champenoise styles to fruity dry whites and reds, to some of the sweetest wines on the planet – there's something for everyone.

One of the biggest difficulties for consumers though can be reading the labels on the bottles. But as there are a growing number of English labels on the market, it is possible to go shopping without a translator.

Of the 22 tongue twisting regions the most well-known is unquestionably the region of Tokaj-Hegyalja, which produces some of the most respected sweet wines in the world. In the 16th century, the European royal families drank Tokaji and ever since it's taken a special place in all the great wine cellars of the world. There are many other wine regions worth visiting including Villány, Somló (quite rustic and traditional wines), Neszmély and Eger (home of the famous Bull's Blood red wine).

The wine regions in Hungary are situated in some of the most beautiful areas of the country so visiting them will, at the very least, ensure you get a few great photos to take back home. Another interesting aspect of the wine lands is that a lot of the wine-making towns have impressive ancient underground cellars. Exploring these cellars can be a lot of fun and it can be a great day out for holidaymakers.

0) Sam Harrop's article is worth reading because
- A) he has been to all the top wine regions in the world.

Back to school for speeding drivers

Motorists to be offered a day in class as an alternative to penalty points

Motorists caught exceeding the speed limit will be able to avoid the traditional penalty points by spending a day in the classroom.

First-time speeders breaking the limit will be invited to pay £60 – the same as a fine – to take a speed awareness course, it was announced yesterday.

Those who take up the offer will not have points put on their licence. More than 52,000 speeders in Lancashire, where the scheme has been tested for three years, took up the offer.

Police said the aim of the 'one last chance' initiative was to win back public support after the Government's controversial speed camera policy, which critics say is a money-making exercise. More than two million motorists were fined £60 and penalised with three points on their licence last year after being snapped by Britain's 6,000 cameras.

The scheme was launched yesterday by Richard Brunstrom of the Association of Chief Police officers, as he chaired a national road policing conference in Birmingham. Mr Brunstrom said: 'If I have any regret, it is that we didn't start these speed awareness courses earlier. In retrospect, I wish we'd done it at the start.'

He claimed that up to 30 per cent of drivers who are offered the course will take it.

The courses comprise classroom and practical driving lessons teaching errant drivers the danger of breaking the limit. Motorists will take a two-hour and a half-hour lesson identifying what causes them to ignore the limit, the consequences of speeding, followed by up to three hours of practical training and exercises behind the wheel with an advanced driving instructor.

Motorists can only take one course in three years.

Mr Brunstrom said: 'A national scheme means you could get done for speeding in Devon, but take your course in Edinburgh.'

0)	Speeding drivers are offered driving lessons as well as given penalty points.	0)	B
18)	Speed awareness lessons will cost as much as a fine.	18)
19)	During a trial period many drivers have decided to go on the course.	19)
20)	Lancashire was chosen for the test because more drivers are caught there than in other areas.	20)
21)	The police don't think they can win back public support.	21)
22)	The Government will use the money made with speed cameras to finance the new scheme.	22)
23)	Mr Brunstrom believes they have chosen the best time to introduce the scheme.	23)
24)	He is optimistic about the future of the scheme.	24)
25)	During the course participants will spend almost as much time in the classroom as in the car.	25)
26)	Most motorists taking part in the course have found it useful and enjoyable.	26)
27)	Drivers will have to take a speed awareness course near where they were caught.	27)

Task B

You are a regular reader of a teenage magazine called Teen Life. Each week there is a reader's letter in it and other readers are invited to give advice. Here is this week's letter:

> I've been offered a babysitting job for a three-week period during the summer holidays. The couple wants me to stay all day Monday and Wednesday (7:30am-5:30pm), and from 7:30am to 2:30pm Tuesday and Thursday. They have offered me 10 pounds per week. My sister says that 10 pounds for that much time is completely ridiculous and that I am going to be taken advantage of. Still, I would like to take the job because the children are such sweeties and I'm sure I will enjoy looking after them. What do you think I should do?
