SUITS YOU, SIR?

Prince Charles accused of betraying Savile Row's bespoke for Jermyn Street's made-to-measure

For decades he followed the tradition of his royal forefathers, dressing impeccably in £4,000 suits from Savile Row.

Now, however, Prince Charles has shocked the world of fine tailoring by turning his back on his distinctive bespoke outfits. Instead, he has become the first heir to the throne in modern times to buy made-to-measure alternatives – at less than half the price.

The move has prompted accusations that the Prince of Wales has let bespoke tailors – and himself – down by looking, in his mid-fifties, far less elegantly dressed.

Royal sources say that Prince Charles, 57, has recently bought several made-to-measure suits from Turnbull & Asser, who have had an order for his shirts since 1980.

It is thought his turning away from bespoke tailoring may have been influenced by his new wife, the Duchess of Cornwall, while others suspect his frugal private secretary, Sir Micheal Peat.

Officials close to the Prince, however, put the change down to "personal taste".

Bespoke is a term dating from the 17th century, when tailors held the full lengths of cloth on their premises. When a customer chose a length, it was said to have "been spoken for". A tailor who makes a customer's clothes individually is called "bespoke". More than 20 measurements and figuration details are taken from a customer before his suit is cut. That is unlike "made-to-measure", which simply uses a template pattern that is then adjusted, with less precision, to an individual's measurements.

Prince Charles's new image has its fans as well as its critics. When Andre 3000, the hip-hop singer with the band OutKast, came to London to pick up an award from GQ magazine in 2004, he said: "Prince Charles is my number one British style icon."

The last word, however, should go to Richard Walker, the author of Savile Row: An Illustrated History: "The perfect suit is like the perfect wine – it does not exist, except in terms of individual taste."

FO DELIGHTS HIS AUDIENCE WITH BOYHOOD TALES

The Nobel prize-winning writer Dario Fo told an audience at the Edinburgh international book festival yesterday of the early influences (0) _____ as one of the wittiest and most distinctive literary voices.

An early highlight of the book festival, which opened at the weekend, the 79-year-old Fo entertained the sell-out crowd with tales from his boyhood, and attributed his skills as a wordsmith to (9) _____ .

Fo, who won the Nobel prize for literature in 1997, (10) _____ , and there are three productions of his seminal work Accidental Death of an Anarchist in Edinburgh this festival season.

Speaking through his biographer Joseph Farrell, Fo recalled his grandfather, (11) _____ , who would travel from village to village selling vegetables from a horse-drawn cart that the young Fo was allowed to drive.

"I felt like (12) _____ ," said Fo. "I was only five or six and I had the whole of life in my hands. Even if I had been driving the carriage of the sun I could not have felt any better."

His grandfather's skills as a story-teller were supplemented by the stories Fo heard from other inhabitants of the villages around Lake Maggiore, in northern Italy, where he lived. "When I was a boy, unconsciously, spontaneously, I learned (13) _____ ."

Fo also touched on his efforts to free himself from Mussolini's army as a young man after being conscripted. For his first attempt, and as a talented artist as well as a writer, he (14) _____ for himself and some of his colleagues. "I was a born forger," he said.

Later, he escaped and spent 40 days hiding in an abandoned farmhouse, which Fo said was "(15) _____ ."

The book festival event was based on Fo's recently published fictionalised memoirs, My First Seven Years (Plus a Few More). Fo is to make (16) _____ at the festival today with his wife, the actress Franca Rame, to discuss his involvement in, and love of, the theatre.

- Mark it B if it is false.

NEW AUTOPILOT WILL MAKE ANOTHER 9/11 IMPOSSIBLE

A hijack-proof piloting system for airliners is being developed to prevent terrorists repeating the 9/11 outrages. The mechanism is designed to make it impossible to crash the aircraft into air or land targets - and enable the plane to be flown by remote control from the ground in the event of an emergency. Scientists at aircraft giant Boeing are testing the autopilot system which uses state-of-the-art computer and satellite technology. It will be activated by the pilot flicking a simple switch or by pressure sensors in the cockpit door that will respond to any excessive force as terrorists try to break into the flight deck. After it has been turned on, no one on board will be able to deactivate the system. Currently, all autopilots are manually switched on and off by the pilots.

The system will connect ground controllers and security services with the aircraft using radio waves. After it has been activated, the aircraft will be capable of remote digital control from the ground, enabling operators to fly it like a model plane, manoeuvring it vertically and laterally.

A threatened airliner could be flown to a secure airport, where it would touch down using existing landing aids known as 'autoland function'. After it had landed, the aircraft's built-in autobrake would bring the plane safely to a halt on the runway.

Boeing insiders say the new anti-hijack kit could be fitted to airliners all over the world within the next three years. The latest move to fight airline terrorists follows The Mail on Sunday's disclosure three weeks ago that scientists in Britain and Germany are developing a passenger-monitoring device. This will use tiny cameras linked to computers to record every facial expression or suspicious movement made on board flights in order to identify potential terrorists.

A Boeing spokesman said: "We are constantly studying ways we can improve the safety, security and efficiency of the world's airline fleet. There is a need in the industry for a technique that conclusively prevents unauthorised persons gaining access to the controls and threatening the safety of passengers. Once this system is initiated, no one on board is capable of controlling the flight, making it useless for anyone to threaten violence in order to gain control."

17) New satellites will be put into orbit as part of the project.	17)
18) Only the pilot will be able to turn on this new security system.	18)

20) 'Autoland' is another new part of the system.	20)
21) They will start installing the anti-hijack kit in Europe.	21)
22) The passenger monitoring device will record passengers as they board their flights.	22)

CHURCHES TOLD TO PUT UP 'NO SMOKING' SIGNS

Health chiefs are spending thousands of pounds ordering churches to put up signs banning smoking. The decision has left religious leaders puzzled (0) _____ .

A smoking ban in all enclosed public places comes into effect in England in July and in Wales from April but Church figures assumed that (24) _____ there would be no need for signs. There are also concerns (25) _____ ."

One clergyman reported that the Welsh Assembly had sent him identical information packs, (26) _____ , for each of the five churches where he is rector in Anglesey. Task A

Your Scottish friend James has won a one-week adventure holiday for two and wants you to go with him. He has sent you the programme:

Explore the best of the Norwegian Fjords!
Our Kayak Safaris are arranged exclusively for small groups, with an instructor and guide at your side during the whole period. Sitting in a sea kayak you'll have a unique opportunity to encounter wildlife at close hand. On the fjords we normally meet seals, small whales and sometimes sea eagles. The shores offer occasional views of deer, moose, mink and a lot of birds. As nature in Norway is so pure, we can refill our drinking bottles directly from small waterfalls.

We offer paddling instruction adjusted to different paddling levels: for complete beginners, for those who are a little rusty in their techniques, and for experienced paddlers.

Write a letter of 120-150 words to James in which you thank him for the invitation and include the following points:

- Say what you think of adventure holidays in general;
- Say which parts of the programme you find interesting;
- Ask for any details you need to know before you make up your mind.

Begin your letter like this:

Dear James,

Task B

You have found the following story in an online magazine called Right and Wrong and you have decided to comment on it.

> Pequannock High School, which is located in New Jersey, will begin administering random blood tests on Monday to discourage students from drinking. The tests will allow the school faculty to know on Monday if the tested student drank alcohol over the weekend.

Write an article of 200-250 words in which you give your opinion. Include the following:

- If you believe teenage drinking is a serious problem
- If you think the school has the right to check up on students outside school
- Whose duty it is to help teenagers at risk

This is the title of your article:

Is this the solution?
