BURNLEY CHOOSES NEW LOGO

The town of Burnley is going to get a new logo as part of a £110,000 plan to improve the town's image. The 'visual expression' consists of a computer-generated, three-dimensional image of lots of multi-coloured circles. Council bosses are now trying to register the logo, (0) _____ .

It will be seen at gateways to Burnley, and also on a website, to make it easier for people to identify the image with the town. The councillors have rather different opinions of the design: some describe it as 'exciting' (14) _____ . It is believed that the multi-coloured circles represent the different aspects of the town. The red is supposed to represent the urban part of Burnley, (15) _____ .

The leader of Burnley Council said he was a fan of the logo, because it symbolises the town's various characteristic features. He added that the town had beaten others (16) _____ . "Our steps have been successful so far" he said. "Maybe the town was a mess eight or nine years ago, but we have worked hard, and we believe that we are on the right track now. We now have a Premier League football club and we want to be a Premier League town as well. The logo is bright and unusual and really exciting. I think it's a risky choice, (17) _____ ."

Some councillors had no problem with the logo at all: they thought it was a good idea. Others complained that the town had spent too much money on the logo (18) _____ . One of them said: "The logo is not the best I have seen. As for our efforts to let the world know about our results, it's important to get the message across, but it is more important to find the solution to our social and economic problems."

PENSIONER JOINS MARTIAL ART ELITE

George Kerr, 72, a Scottish pensioner, has become one of only seven living people to hold judo's highest rank.

He was named a "10th Dan" black belt at a ceremony held by the International Judo Federation in Paris. He is one of only five non-Japanese people who have won the award. It recognises Mr Kerr's contribution to the sport as a competitor, coach, referee and administrator.

Mr Kerr, who runs a judo club for children in Edinburgh, said he was very happy to get the award. He received it in Paris last Wednesday. Mr Kerr told BBC Scotland: "I feel humbled and proud to be the first Scotsman to receive this honour. I was slightly embarrassed because most of the people that get it are in their 80s while I am only 72."

Mr Kerr, who has written a number of books on judo, insisted he had no plans to slow down as he grew older. He added: "If you give up, if you retire, you die. I will never retire. I just don't work as hard as I used to work but retiring is not on my horizon. I think the sport gives you many things in your life. It teaches you discipline and honesty, and many other things that can contribute to young kids' lives.

Mr Kerr was also honoured by the Japanese government last month for his efforts to bring the people of Japan and the UK closer. He won the gold medal in the 1957 European Championships in Rotterdam and a string of other awards, and is currently president of the British Judo Association.

Mr Kerr began practising judo when he was eight and as a young man won a scholarship to study the sport in Japan for four years.

Task B

You received the following email from your British friend, Lisa:

> I'm really worried about my little sister, Emma. She's only twelve but since she got that pink laptop of hers – it was absolutely necessary for her project work ☺ - she's been on the internet all night every night. She may be chatting and sharing pics and stuff with other girls from school but what if she's giving information about herself to strangers who may be pretending to be someone else? I've heard similar stories. I thought I would talk to her about the risks and how to avoid them. Can you help me collect the most important points?

Write a letter of 100-120 words to Lisa in which you include the following:

- What are the dangers of young teenagers using the internet?
- What do you think they should and shouldn't do to avoid these dangers?
- What do you think young teenagers should use the internet for?

Begin your email like this:
