VATICAN'S LATIN TRANSLATOR SPREADS THE WORD OF A WIMPY KID

It is not typical of the texts that the Vatican's Latin expert is called upon to translate, but Diary of a Wimpy Kid, a book about the strain of school life that has sold millions of copies, could help to showcase the ancient language to a whole new audience.

The children's book has been rendered in the language of Cicero and Seneca by Monsignor Daniel Gallagher, who handles Pope Francis's Latin Twitter account. Known in Latin as Commentarii de Inepto Puero, the book will be published in Britain today and represents the first time the Vatican has involved itself in translating a popular work of fiction as part of an effort to keep the language alive.

Diary of a Wimpy Kid, the first in a series by the American Jeff Kinney, follows the misadventures of Greg Heffley, who is bullied by his older brother, annoyed by his teachers and frustrated by the challenges of his school routine. It has sold around 150 million copies.

Translating schoolboy slang and contemporary vocabulary was not an easy task, Mgr Gallagher said. He translated "computer" into "computratum", "video game" into the relatively straightforward "video lusus" and "heavy metal music" into the literal "musica metallica gravis".

"It was hard work but it was a lot of fun," Mgr Gallagher, 45, told The Daily Telegraph. He came to Rome from his native Michigan as a seminarian 20 years ago and developed a passion for Latin despite not having learnt it at school.

"The challenges were not so much finding the right vocabulary, but rendering the modern English into a Latin that captured the spirit of the ancient Romans," he said. "It may not read like Cicero, but I hope it demonstrates that everything can be said Latinly."

THE PERILS OF 'TABOO' GIFTS

When British transport minister Baroness Kramer gave Taipei mayor Ko Wen-je a small watch as a present, she was simply following standard diplomatic protocol. The exchange of gifts is commonplace on such trips abroad, but cultural norms differ from country to country, and Baroness Kramer was breaking a local norm.

Giving a clock to someone in Chinese culture is a bad omen, suggesting they are running out of time. The mayor laughed off the incident with a joke, while Baroness Kramer apologised, saying "we learn something new every day." It appears her office may not have read Debrett's, the etiquette guide, which advises readers to "do some research to avoid making a basic error– the bottle of whisky to the teetotaller, or the chocolate to the dieter."

William Hanson, an etiquette expert, says that most diplomatic gifts are agreed between both parties in advance – and regardless, "research should be done."

Baroness Kramer's mistake is not rare – navigating the cultural minefield can be difficult for diplomats and business executives. One culture's prized gift can be another's cause for grave offence. A ceremonial sword in some parts of Africa is a symbol of power; in Switzerland it would be a sign of aggression.

Some things are common, though. Almost all cultural taboos revolve around death, regardless of location. The number four is considered bad luck in China, because it tonally sounds like death, while the number eight is good, because it sounds similar to the word for wealth.

In the UK, knives are generally not given as presents because superstition says they could cut through a friendship. A bunch of chrysanthemums are a no-go area for the Spanish, because they are associated with death, much in the same way as you wouldn't present a bunch of white lilies to a Briton.

Indeed, flowers are a particularly troublesome area. Red roses – a traditional lovers' gift – would be out of place at a business meeting, while yellow roses commonly suggest infidelity in France, and death in Mexico. And superstition suggests you should always give an odd number of flowers – but not 13.

As for a foolproof gift to present to a colleague that's guaranteed not to offend, regardless of where in the world you give it, Hanson has one suggestion: "Books are much safer. When I advise companies, I say a nice coffee table book on London or England does the job well."

WHY YOUR GP MAY BE RECOMMENDING A DOSE OF THE GREAT OUTDOORS IN FUTURE

Next time you visit your GP* expecting to leave with a prescription for a med, you might be in for a surprise. Instead of the usual printout, you might find yourself (0) _____ , prescribing an activity outside – a weekly group walk, perhaps. The idea, say advocates, is to (15) _____ , getting more people better and potentially saving the NHS from financial ruin.

So-called "green prescriptions" have long been the norm in New Zealand, as well as in some parts of Australia and the United States, and they are (16) _____ . "Studies of life expectancy show that lack of exercise is now second only to smoking in causing premature deaths," says Dr Tim Ballard, vice chair of the Royal College of GPs. He (17) _____ points to the health benefits of being out and about in green spaces – less tension, stress and depression; lower blood pressure; improved immune system responses; lower levels of obesity, and milder ADHD symptoms in children, just to name a few. In fact, (18) _____ – instead of staring at a TV screen or computer monitor, for example – is as important as an overall increase in physical activity. "So I think GPs will be more likely to give their patients green prescriptions in future," Dr Ballard predicts.

The cost saving (19) _____ . For every £1 spent on establishing healthy walking schemes, the NHS could save £7.18 in the cost of treating conditions such as heart disease, strokes and diabetes.

But surely GPs have long been telling people to "take a hike", as it were, to (20) _____ ? What's different now? "The big change is making exercise fun and sociable, as well as using it as a (21) _____ ," Dr Ballard explains. "Encouraging someone to go for a walk in a green space, which ends with a pint in a pub or a cup of tea, (22) _____ far more appealing. You're talking to your mates, you're out in the countryside and you're having a good time. It's all about trying to get exercise to be (23) _____ , not an add-on."

The outdoors element is critical, Dr Ballard says. "For some reason, it is much easier to keep up a movement or exercise regime when it's outdoors."

SACRAMENTO TO BAN LOUD OR SLEEPING PEOPLE FROM BUSES AND TRAINS

Loud or sleeping people will soon be asked to leave buses and light rail trains in Sacramento under new rules approved by transportation officials Monday night.

The proposals come as Sacramento enjoys a downtown building boom that will eventually add a high-end basketball arena and a soccer stadium, amenities that officials hope will draw fans to the area by light rail, bus or train. "If we can make it more attractive or make it more enjoyable to use the light rail or bus, then people are more apt to use it," said Alane Masui, spokeswoman for the Sacramento Regional Transit District.

Like many American cities, Sacramento fans out toward its suburbs in an extensive road network, which was built more for automobiles than public transit in most areas, and has struggled to win middle-class riders to its bus and light rail system. Criticism abounds. Last year, nearly 7,000 customers contacted the public transit system's customer complaints department and transit officials also reported 318 crimes, according to transit system data.

The system, which serves the City and County of Sacramento, has about 98,000 boardings on weekdays. Under the regulation, passengers will no longer be allowed to get on a bus or train unless they are covered "above and below the waist" and wearing shoes. They will also be banned from playing sound equipment that is audible to other passengers and will be banned from sleeping on a train that has reached the end of the line. Those who refuse to comply could be kicked off by authorities, the regulation says. A separate measure that would have barred people who let off noxious odors was removed from the rules, Masui said. Supporters of disadvantaged Sacramentans said that this particular rule would have been a blow for homeless people, who have a right to ride buses and trains.

The rules will be implemented once officials finalize remaining details and customers are notified of the changes.

Task 1

Before you start your studies at university you would like to take a year off to travel and work as a volunteer. You have found the following advertisement:

Dairy farm and horse farm in Iceland looking for volunteers in the Arctic

We are a family of 4, and we run a farm in Iceland which is a dairy farm and a horse farm. We speak English, Danish and Icelandic. Volunteers can do two kinds of jobs:

Cooking and cleaning:
This involves cooking a hot meal once a day (for 6-7 people), and some cleaning when needed, particularly in the kitchen. You need to have basic experience in cooking (we are very open-minded regarding cooking so you can provide your own recipes).

Stable/cowshed work and working with horses:
This involves cleaning the stables and the cowsheds, exercising trained horses, occasionally riding inexperienced horses. If you want to work with horses, you need to have experience.

We live in a beautiful rural area, with lots of space, northern lights and arctic beauty. If you would like to try a different lifestyle in a friendly, international environment, this is a perfect opportunity.

Task 2

You have found the following post on an internet forum called Good Character:

> My girlfriend Phoebe has always been an excellent student but lately she has been more and more overwhelmed by her advanced courses and college applications. She has been sick for the past month and has fallen behind in many of her classes. Her application to Brown University and her Advanced Art History paper were both due on Monday. On Sunday she made a tough decision and copied a whole section of her paper from an article on the internet. Then she finished her application and went to bed. On Monday, she turned in her paper.
>
> The first time she told me about it was at lunchtime, after her Advanced Art History teacher had spoken to her. He had realized pretty fast that a large portion of her paper was plagiarized and confronted her about it. Phoebe burst into tears and explained about all the pressures of being sick, taking five advanced courses, and being president of the student body. However, he said he would leave it to the principal to decide whether they would inform the colleges she had applied to.
>
> I feel so sorry for her as she has worked so hard throughout her high school career and is applying to the most competitive colleges and universities. Still I don't know what advice I should give her. Pls help!

- if you think copying from the internet should be taken seriously,
- if you think what Phoebe did is justifiable in her situation,
- what you think of the Art Teacher's attitude,
- if you can think of any solution now.
