GOLD COINS FOUND IN A CHARITY KETTLE

The Salvation Army regularly uses donation kettles to collect money for charity purposes. Not long ago they found five gold coins in their donation kettle at a food store in Mebane, North Carolina — three South African Krugerrand, one American Riverman and one Canadian Maple Leaf. All came in little plastic packages to keep them safe.

"We got the Riverman about a week ago, and we got the other four over the last two days," said the Salvation Army spokesman. The organisation had already received such coins before with the exception of the Riverman.

All the coins were dropped in the kettle by an anonymous donor.

The organisation is planning to take the five coins to a shop in High Point to determine their value. "We have a guy that we go to every year. He buys them from us," the spokesman said.

The group will use the money they get for the coins like any other gifts they receive. "I think it's amazing to get these coins every year because that is a really large donation," the spokesman said.

BAMBOO HOUSE: CUBO WINS TOP PRIZE

Earl Forlales, the creator of a house made of bamboo, has won a £50,000 top prize to develop cities for the future. Earl Forlales, 23, a graduate in engineering, was awarded first prize by the Royal Institute of Surveyors for his house, known as Cubo. The Royal Institute decided to give top prize to the house because of its use of low-cost eco-friendly material, and the speed with which it could be constructed. The house could be manufactured in a week, constructed in four hours and costs £60 per square metre.

The competition was aiming to find practical solutions to housing problems that the world's cities face. There were more than 1,200 competitors; they were narrowed down to 12 finalists, who were given a mentor from the Royal Institute to help develop their ideas over several months and then finally build their houses.

The competition head judge said: "There is a need for clean and comfortable places to live for future generations. There were many exciting designs among the projects. However, Earl's idea stood out for its cheap and simple solution to the world's growing accommodation problem."

The winner, Forlales has already selected a suitable area of land to start building his Cubo houses in Manila, capital of the Philippines, because there are huge pressures on housing in the city. He plans to begin work next year. He said: "Cubo started as an idea while I was spending time at my grandparents' house – it is great that it will now become a reality."

Task 2

You have received the following email from your Dutch friend, Max:

> Last night when I was going home from a party, a guy about the same age as me approached me and asked me if he could use my phone as his had just died. I hesitated, but not for long, I'm a trusting person, so sure he could use my phone.
>
> He phoned his dad telling him he was on his way home and asking him if he needed anything from the kebab takeout round the corner. After he had finished, he hung up and passed the phone to me. Or, at least, he tried to but my phone slipped from his fingers and landed with a crack on the pavement. The screen of my Huawei Honor 5X splintered into a cobweb that covered the bottom half of the screen. I was shocked! But before I could open my mouth, he mumbled an apology and disappeared into the dark night.
>
> What would you have done in my place? Or, more importantly, what should I do now? His dad's number is saved in my call history. Do you think it's a good idea to phone him? And ask for his son's name and number? Or compensation for my phone? I really don't know what to do, pls help!
