Task 1

- In the following article about rest, the paragraph headings have been removed.
- Your task is to write the letters of the headings (A-I) next to the appropriate numbers (1-6).
- There are two extra headings that you do not need.
- Write the letters in the white boxes as in the example *(0).

THE SEVEN TYPES OF REST

Have you ever tried to fix your lack of energy by getting more sleep — and still felt exhausted? If so, here's the secret: sleep and rest are not the same thing, although people tend to confuse the two. There are seven types of rest – needed by everyone.

0*) _____
It is about resting your body. In addition to sleeping or napping, it can include anything that restores your body, like getting a massage or attending a yoga class.

1) _____
If you often find your head spinning because of doing too many things at once, you're in need of this type of rest. Basically, it's anything that gives your brain a break from focusing too hard – meditation, a walk around the block or doing something monotonous, like the washing up.

2) _____
Although you might not realise it on a day-to-day basis, you are continuously overwhelmed by new sights, smells and sounds, from the bright light of your phone to the noise of traffic. Taking some time to unplug from all of these to give yourself a break is crucial to feel well-rested.

3) _____
Do you lead a life where you often have to solve problems or come up with new ideas? You need to balance this out by practising something that makes you feel inspired, like designing something original, such as painting a picture, or knitting a colourful scarf.

4) _____
Holding onto your feelings – either to please others or simply because you feel unable to express them – requires a lot of energy. You need a break from this, too, by processing your feelings and sharing them honestly with those around you.

5) _____
This isn't about spending time alone (although if you're introverted, it might be helpful, too), but about spending time with people who love and support you, rather than those who frustrate or pressure you.

6) _____
This is the ability to connect with something beyond the physical and mental. If you're religious, this might mean practising your religion. If not, it might mean doing something which gives you a sense of purpose, like volunteering.

WHO IS THE REDHEAD LIVING IN THE TOWER OF LONDON?

With her flaming red curls, Megan Clawson looks like a fairy-tale princess. So when she walks around the 950-year-old Tower of London, it's no wonder she draws attention from visitors. But she isn't a formal part of the attraction, or a royal ghost walking the walls, as some tourists think. She really does live in the Tower, with the Beefeaters – who have been guarding the Tower since Tudor times.

"Obviously, I always wanted to be a princess myself," she said, admitting her ginger hair occasionally made her a target when she was younger. "In history, a lot of the big figures were redheads," she said. "If I was Tudor, I definitely wouldn't have people picking on me."

The famously redheaded Queen Elizabeth I was imprisoned at the Tower as a princess, and Megan has had friends suggest she could dress up as the Virgin Queen and "scare tourists". Megan, an aspiring actor, is frequently compared to fictional princesses like Merida from Brave or Sansa from Game of Thrones.

Megan moved into a family apartment in the eastern wall of the Tower last summer with her father, who is one of 32 Beefeaters living within the ancient walls. When the Tower was closed to the public due to the pandemic, she was in her "own little world", walking her dog Ethel, hanging the laundry up in the castle grounds and sitting on her balcony with views over the grounds to Tower Bridge. "It really did feel like living in a palace."

Now that the doors have reopened to the public, tourists are back. Walking along the walls, they can see Megan on the balcony and don't realise she can hear them talking about her. "People think I'm somebody royal and they don't realise I can hear every word they say because of the acoustics of the walls," she said.

Megan regularly updates her TikTok and Instagram followers on life in the Tower of London. "All the people who have touched these walls and these gates, all the things the Tower has seen – and now it's just me on my bed, in my pyjamas, watching Netflix. Thrilling!"

0) Megan Clawson loved reading fairy tales about princesses as a child.	0)	C
16) As a child, sometimes she was bullied because of her hair.	16)
17) According to her friends, if she dressed up as Queen Elizabeth I, she could easily frighten people.	17)
18) Megan hates being compared to fictional characters she resembles.	18)
19) Thanks to the lockdown during the pandemic, she had the chance to experience life in the Tower without visitors disturbing her daily routine.	19)
20) Megan doesn't mind hearing people talk about her during their visit to the Tower.	20)
21) Megan does not let people know much about her everyday life in the Tower.	21)
22) She feels uncomfortable doing trivial things in a historic setting.	22)

KID INVENTORS WHO CHANGED OUR LIVES

To celebrate Kid Inventors' Day, we have collected a few inventions from the past which were hatched in the minds of children.

Eleven-year-old Frank Epperson invented the popsicle. On a winter's eve in 1905, Frank forgot to bring inside a fruit-flavoured soft drink that he had left on his porch. He accidentally left the drink outside overnight, with the stirring stick in the glass. The drink froze solid, and a delicious dessert was born.

A young gymnast, George Nissen invented the trampoline in 1930, at the age of 16. After seeing trapeze artists drop into the safety net beneath them, he thought it would be exciting to perform tricks while bouncing around. He designed a device for bouncing with a metal frame and a canvas stretched over it with rubber springs. When trampoline gymnastics was made an Olympic sport in 2008, 94-year-old George attended the event as a guest of honour.

In 1873 Chester Greenwood was just 15 years old when his ears got painfully cold one day while ice skating. He designed a wire frame and asked his grandmother to sew beaver skins to it – thereby making the first pair of earmuffs. He ended up patenting the invention by age 19 and even selling them to soldiers during the First World War.

Canadian Joseph-Armand Bombardier was interested in mechanics and in 1922, at the age of 15, he invented the snowmobile. First, he developed a propeller-driven sleigh, which was the first vehicle that could travel over snow. Later he moved on to cars that he modified with chains and tracks so that they could carry passengers and goods over ice and snow. With the launch of the Ski-Doo in 1959, he created a new recreational sport.

In the early 1700s, at age 11, Benjamin Franklin invented swim flippers. He was a keen swimmer and wanted to increase his speed in the water. He designed handheld fins made out of oval-shaped planks of wood with holes in the middle for his hands. Unlike today's modern flippers that are worn on the feet, his swim fins were strapped to the swimmer's hands to make each stroke more efficient.

SKELETON IN THE WALL

A playful mum has left behind a spooky surprise in her home for the next owner to find. Sue Goff, from Dorking in Surrey, came up with the hilarious prank whilst renovating their living room with her husband. They have noticed a hole in the wall in which the former occupants had left old photographs. To keep it up with the tradition, Sue decided to leave behind a slightly more than terrifying addition in the form of a full-size Halloween skeleton all along with an envelope that reads 'Hide and seek champ 2021'. The 57-year-old mum-of-two says what she enjoys pranking her family and could not resist the opportunity to scare others hard. Sue said: "I've played practical jokes on my kids all their life, so I think they're a bit fed up with it, to be honest. My youngest daughter especially. At once I hid under her bed for a half an hour whilst she was in the shower. Then, when she walked in, I grabbed her ankles. I also chased her down the road dressed as a zombie nun. It's all been in good fun, though."

Task 2

You found the following post on the internet forum Job Issues:

My older sister, Sandie (25) studied to be an art designer and has been working as an art or production designer for independent, low budget films (very low budget indeed – she practically works for peanuts). Her job involves designing film sets, costumes, sometimes also posters, etc., which she enjoys a lot because of the opportunity for personal growth due to the variety of work, and because there's always a respectable cause for these films: political, social or environmental.
Now she has been invited to join the art crew in a show which would feature several (ex-) tv reality show stars competing in stupid games among extreme circumstances (to win several thousands of dollars). The project would take about eight months and she would be paid more than ten times the salary she would normally earn. Someone she used to work with and who appreciates her work recommended her and now she has a week to make up her mind before either signing the contract or turning it down.
Our family is in turmoil now. Some of us agree with Sandie, who is hesitating, saying that taking part in such rubbish, giving her NAME to it, as she put it, would destroy her reputation and would go against everything that she has professionally done and achieved so far. Others, including me, however, think that this is a wonderful opportunity which she shouldn't miss.
I can't see the moral issue there, can you? I'd appreciate your opinion.
Shane 18

Write a comment of 200-250 words to Shane's post in which you tell him

- what the advantages of accepting the job could be,
- what the advantages of rejecting it could be,
- whether you think the problem has a moral aspect,
- what you would do if you were Sandie.
