FIVE-YEAR-OLD CAUGHT DRIVING PARENTS' CAR IN UTAH

Five-year-old Adrian took the family car, and was only caught when police in Utah State stopped him on the freeway. A patrolman saw the car, which was crossing lanes at 50km/h, and made the car stop. He was shocked to discover the child behind the wheel, who said he was on his way to buy a Lamborghini.

The boy told police that he had left home after his mother refused to buy him the luxury car – lower-priced models cost over $180,000 –, which caused an argument.

"He decided he'd take the car and go to a car salesman in California to buy one himself," Utah Highway Patrol said on Twitter, "but he only had 3 dollars in his wallet."

Camera footage posted by the local TV shows the car in traffic before stopping at the police signal. Highway patrol first thought it might be a driver with health problems behind the wheel. In the recording, the officer can then be heard saying "How old are you? You're five years old?" when he sees the boy. The boy was sitting at the very edge of the seat to be able to reach the pedals. He was stopped about five minutes' drive from home.

No-one was hurt in the incident. The boy's parents were at work and he was in the care of a relative when he took the car. Police asked parents to make sure car keys are not easily accessible to children.

THE BEST WILDLIFE PHOTOS OF THE YEAR

The Natural History Museum in London holds a yearly contest for the Wildlife Photographer of the Year, with over 10 categories. This year's contest had 49,000 entries from around the world.

This year's grand prize winner was Sergey Gorshkov's picture of a Siberian tiger. Siberian tigers are endangered; only about 500 of them live in Russia's far east. It took Mr. Gorshkov ten months to get a shot of one of them. It looks like the tiger is hugging the tree, but it's actually trying to leave its smell as a way of communicating with other tigers.

Another endangered animal, a glass frog, was a category prize winner. Jaime Culebras said he had walked for four hours in the Andes mountains in the middle of a rainstorm, before he captured the picture of the frog snacking on a spider.

Mogens Trolle won the Animal Portraits prize with his picture of a young proboscis monkey, which is sitting calmly, enjoying the sunlight with its eyes closed. Proboscis monkeys look strange because the male's nose can eventually grow so big that it hangs over its mouth and may have to be pushed aside to eat. They're endangered and only found on Borneo and the islands nearby.

There is a separate contest for people under 18, known as the Young Wildlife Photographer of the Year. In this contest, pictures are judged in three separate age groups.

In the 10 and under category, Andrés Luis Dominguez Blanco of Spain won with his picture of a bird called a "stonechat" sitting on a bending plant. He asked his father to drive him to the field, in order to use the car as a hiding place for taking photographs. Andrés managed to take the picture without scaring the bird.

Another young winner, Liina Heikkinen had spent a day watching two adult foxes bring food to their cubs. After one parent brought home a goose, the cubs fought over it. Liina took a picture of a young fox eating the goose, while hiding away from his siblings.

Task 2

You have received the following email from your Czech friend, Jan:

> You know I've been studying Chinese for years, simply out of interest, no plans for a future career as a diplomat or anything 😊. I've been attending a nearby language school which is part of a big and prestigious language school specializing in Oriental languages in Brno. I'm at Level 3, doing fine so far with good exam results. The lessons are fun with wonderful teachers and a bunch of dedicated (crazy?) guys like myself.
> I have just received an email from the school to say that the branch in my hometown, Vyškov, is going to be shut down from September, which means that I can't continue my studies the same way as up to now. They offered me the choice of either going to Brno, which is a 30-minute journey there and back, for my course or continuing in the form of on-line video lessons. I'm really upset and can't make up my mind! I can see the good and the bad sides of both; however, I'm worried that whichever I choose it won't be the 'real thing', if you know what I mean. What do you think?

Write an email of 100-120 words to Jan in which you tell him

- whether you or any of your friends have ever had on-line video lessons,
- what the main advantage and the main disadvantage of online learning are,
- how you like the other option he has been offered,
- which one you think he should choose and why.
