MUSICIAN STEPHEN MORRIS REUNITED WITH £250,000 TECCHLER VIOLIN

A 310-year-old violin worth £250,000 that was left on a train in south London has been returned to its owner.

0) _____

1) _____

British Transport Police (BTP) later released a CCTV image of a man believed to have taken the violin as the train approached Bromley South and asked him to get in touch, generating calls on social media for its return.

2) _____

3) _____

Calling himself "Gene", which was not his real name, the man agreed to meet Mr Morris on Friday evening at a Waitrose car park near Beckenham train station.

4) _____

5) _____

"He was very apologetic, he said he wanted to hand it to me in person. The violin and bows were intact and in tune. It couldn't have ended in a happier way," Mr Morris said.

On Saturday BTP issued a statement concerning the incident.

6) _____

A) Tired after a long day recording at Abbey Road studios Mr Morris, who has played on film scores including The Lord of the Rings and James Bond, was distressed.

B) "I feel a bit battered and bruised," he said. "I haven't had a great deal of sleep since it went missing."

0)	C

~~C) The violin, which was made by master craftsman David Tecchler in 1709, was left on the London to Orpington train on 22 October when Stephen Morris, a professional musician, got out at Penge East with his bike.~~

D) Shortly after 22:10, the police team watched as "Gene", in his mid to late 20s, approached Mr Morris, shook his hand and transferred a holdall containing the violin.

E) “I knew from experience that we were not dealing with a hardened criminal,” the officer said. “The man was desperate to get it back, but needed to be convinced that he would not be arrested.”

F) Over the next 24 hours further contact was made with the person who had sent the message – it's suspected that he was in fact the individual who had taken the violin.

G) It said they would be taking no further action against the man because he had taken reasonable steps to contact the violin owner and had handed it back.

H) The breakthrough came on Thursday when Mr Morris received a direct Twitter message, which read: "I recognise the person in the picture. I think it may be somebody I know – I'd like to be of help. I know what it's like to leave valuables on a train."

I) In an operation co-ordinated by the musician's friend and former police officer, Mike Pannett, a team of plain-clothes officers were placed on stand-by in case the handover went wrong.

WHAT MAKES AN ICONIC BOOK COVER?

A great book might stay with us for a long time but, often, its cover does, too. There's a famous saying about never forming your opinion of a book by the jacket on it. But most readers know that we do judge books by their covers all the time. Everything about a book's cover – the font, the images, the colours – tells us something about what we can expect to find inside. A reader looking for some thrilling detective story is unlikely to reach for a pastel-coloured cover with a romantic design.

Covers can be a swift way to signal genre, but the good ones do more than that. They give a face to a book's personality. They're what will make you pick it up in the first place, then keep it on your shelf to remind you what it meant to you. "When you're reading a book, it stays with you for a while, literally," says Donna Payne, creative director at Faber & Faber.

The emergence of ebooks posed a threat to physical books a decade or so ago. But publishers fought back, making books that were more beautiful to look at and to hold than ever before. Fonts got bolder, colours are brighter. Alongside this, people increasingly started posting pictures of books on social media. Search #bookstagram on Instagram and you'll find more than 43 million images of books – next to cups of coffee, lying on crisp duvet covers, or perched on the edge of sun loungers.

All this means cover design is more important than ever. "I think people are really appreciating it as art again," says Payne. But what makes a great cover? "For us, it's one that provokes a reaction of some sort. It might be that not everyone loves the cover. Or it might be that everyone is talking about it. But what we don't ever want to do is produce covers that are bland."

Payne says creating a cover that is true to the book is just as important as creating something memorable. "You can publish an incredibly beautiful cover that leads people to believe it's a certain type of book, and if the reading experience is quite different from that, they feel they're not getting what they've paid for. You've failed in finding the right readers for that book."

0) Book covers are playing an increasingly important role in the literary business.	0) A
16) The majority of readers do not have expectations about a book's content based on its cover.	16)
17) More detective stories are sold yearly than romantic novels.	17)
18) A book cover draws attention to a book so that readers want to read it.	18)
19) Ebooks made publishers rethink their attitude to book covers.	19)
20) People post pictures of books on Instagram because they want to boast about how rich their book collection is.	20)
21) Designers' main goal is to create book covers that readers admire.	21)
22) If the cover of a book does not reflect its content, readers are disappointed.	22)

NEW DOG WALKING RULE IN GERMANY CAUSES CONFUSION

A new rule forcing Germans to take their dog for a walk twice a day has unleashed a debate on whether the state can decide what is best for the country's 9.4 million pet canines.

Agriculture Minister Julia Kloeckner announced this week she had taken expert advice and was introducing a law to ensure dogs go for a walk or run in the garden at least twice a day for a total of an hour. "Pets are not cuddly toys – they also have their own needs, which need to be taken into account," said Kloeckner, adding that pets must get sufficient exercise and not be left alone for too long.

The rules are based on new scientific findings that show dogs need a "sufficient measure of activity and contact with environmental stimuli", especially in the form of spending time in green areas and out of the city. Tying dogs on a chain or a lead for long periods also faces an all-out ban.

With almost one in five German homes owning a hound, the new Animal Welfare Regulation, which also sets limits on the transportation of farm animals in hot weather, affects a significant proportion of the population.

"Compulsory Walkies for Dog Owners? Rubbish!" wrote one of the top-selling German newspapers in a heated opinion piece on the new decree. Its author, Udo Kopernik, the spokesman for the National German Dog Association, said most owners were laughing at the new rule because they already spent enough time walking their four-legged friend. "One rule for all dogs is probably well meant but unrealistic," he said. Dog trainer Anja Striegel seems to concur when she claims that the amount of exercise a dog needs depends on the health, age and breed of the animal.

"For a young and fit Labrador two hours of walkies are healthier than for a sickly Pekingese with heart problems," she said in an interview. Germany's most popular breeds are the German Shepherd and short-legged, long-bodied Dachshund, known as "sausage dogs", followed by Labradors, and French spaniels.

Then there is the question of enforcement. The ministry has said the regional governments will be responsible for enforcing the rule, but as one dog owner, Lisa, said: "I find it patronising to be told how long I should take my dog out for. Ridiculous!"

0) Many people don't understand the reason	A) that it's not good for dogs to be kept in urban areas all the time.
23) There are some people who doubt	B) that the same regulation cannot possibly work well for all dogs.
24) The Agriculture Minister suggests	C) ~~why the new dog walking rule was introduced~~.
25) Recent research shows	D) that he was personally involved in drafting the new regulation.
26) Mr. Kopernik's first reaction to the new law shows	E) that farm animals need less exercise in hot weather.
	F) that he finds it quite ridiculous.
27) Mr. Kopernik and Ms. Striegel agree	G) that the new law treats her like a child.
28) At least one dog owner is offended by the idea	H) that dogs become too lazy if they don't exercise.
	I) that it's up to the government to make such a decision.
	K) that people don't always consider what their four-legged friends want.

By age 12, he was serving as an apprentice at a printing shop (9) _____ (own) by his brother, James. SQUARE CHOCOLATE BATTLE

For decades, Ritter Sport (0) _____ marketed its chocolate bars on their unique, square shape. So when Swiss brand Milka challenged its German monopoly on square chocolate, the battle lines were drawn.

The square bar dates back to 1932, when Clara Ritter came up (17) _____ the idea, according to company legend. "Let's make a chocolate bar (18) _____ fits in everyone's jacket pocket without breaking and weighs the same as a normal long bar," she is supposed to (19) _____ said. Later, in 1970, the company launched its first television advert with the slogan "Square. Practical. Good".

The Ritter family company registered the shape with the German patent and trademark office in 1993, so when Milka began marketing a square bar in 2010, the case went (20) _____ court. Milka achieved an initial victory in 2016 by (21) _____ the trademark deleted but that decision was changed the following year, and Ritter could keep its monopoly. Finally, the case (22) _____ up in the Federal Court of Justice, where judges threw out Milka's complaint and decided in (23) _____ of Ritter Sport in 2020.

Normally, a brand cannot claim trademark protection in Germany if its shape is simply a functional characteristic of the product. But the judges said Ritter Sport was different. "Consumers consider the shape as an indication of both (24) _____ the chocolate comes from and its quality," they concluded. It means that Ritter's bar can remain the only top-brand square chocolate bar on the shelves in German shops.

Task 1

You are continuing your studies at the University of Edinburgh, which offers several sports activities for its students. You have come across the following on the website of the Sports Union.

This year is a better time than ever to become a part of one of the biggest and best clubs in Edinburgh! Having grown massively in recent years, we offer badminton for all abilities.

For those just looking to come along and have a laugh, we have weekly training sessions where you can learn the basics from our experienced coaches while enjoying the company of the brilliant members of our club. You are also welcome to join us on our Friday night bowling parties or pub quizzes.

On a more competitive note, our five mixed teams compete in the Scottish leagues with two teams in the top two divisions. We also have a large number of teams competing in the local Edinburgh league.

So whether you have never held a racquet in your life or you fancy yourself as a bit of a hotshot, come along to our club and we guarantee you won't want to leave.

CONTACT Adam at badminton@ed.ac.uk.

Write an email of 120-150 words to Adam in which you

- introduce yourself and say whether you have done any sports before,
- say how good you are at badminton and why you want to join the club,
- ask about the time and place of the training sessions, and about the Friday night activities.

Task 2

You have found the following post on the internet forum Slings and Arrows:

> Josh:
> I'm a 19-year-old guy and study in Aberdeen. My parents live outside Pitlochry and they rent a room for me next to the university so that I needn't commute every day. We regularly speak on the phone; however, my mum sometimes feels the need to see me so she just jumps into her car and turns up on my doorstep unexpectedly. If I'm out, she leaves home-made food in plastic boxes in the fridge, sometimes does a quick clean or puts my clothes into the washing machine in the laundry room and I find her there chatting with one of my flatmates I hardly know while waiting for the drier to finish.
> You may say she's fantastic, that I'm very lucky and should be happy to have such a caring mum… BUT! Can you imagine what it feels like when, after a party, I choose to sleep in and miss a morning class or two and wake up at 10 a.m. to find my mum sitting reproachfully next to my bed, telling me in a really annoying way that I seem to have forgotten the sacrifice she and dad have made to make university possible for me. Whatever I say we'll end up arguing, with her in tears and me furious and shouting.
> Believe me, I really appreciate everything they are doing to support me but I also think that living on my own should mean the beginning of my independent life and they should accept this, let me off the leash and stop controlling me. I don't mind if they want to know my timetable or have a key to my place as long as they respect my privacy and start treating me as an adult.
> What do you think?

Write a reply of 200-250 words to Josh in which you tell him what you think

- of his mother's attitude,
- of his feelings,
- it means to be an adult,
- he should do to change this situation.
