BOOKSTORES IN NEW YORK

New York City is one of the most literary cities in the world. If you're a book lover roaming the streets of the Big Apple, we're here to give you some advice.

Books are Magic is owned by Emma Straub, the author of The Vacationers. She and her husband, who also live in the area, created a literary slice of heaven. Aside from being full of awesome reads, the store has a ton of cool author events.

Mcnally Jackson Books has a great selection of used books and new titles available. Their selection varies because many books are bought from the community, and one can even find some signed by local authors – a real treat for a bookie!

Astoria Bookshop holds a variety of literary events that are sure to bring a crowd. They do events like "The Storytelling Show", where people can put their name in a hat and have the chance to be chosen to tell a five-minute, no-theme story to a room full of total strangers.

The Corner Bookstore has been impacting local readers since 1978. They carefully select the best of the best current titles to display and sell, and they feature an impressive kids' section that satisfies the family friendly area and their residents.

For over 50 years, Rizzoli Bookstore has been considered one of the foremost independent booksellers in America, featuring illustrated books on architecture, interior design, fashion, photography, cookery, and more.

Housing Works is more than just a bookstore. It's a non-profit that was established to fight AIDS and homelessness in NYC, causes it helps to fund through selling books. Every book comes from donation, and with a staff made up almost entirely of volunteers, this shop is able to put 100% of their proceeds back into Housing Works.

Strand Bookstore was started in 1927 in a street that used to be called "Book Row". The Bass family runs this shop in its current space, just a few blocks from the original location, and carries over 2.5 million used, new, and rare books.

WHY DO GRADUATES TOSS THEIR HATS IN THE AIR?

Imagine, for a second, that you are (0) _____ through the eyes of an alien unfamiliar with our culture. You see students struggling day after day with lectures, assignments, and tests (7) _____, signifying the completion of their studies. You see these students, in some instances, spending time and effort creatively decorating and (8) _____. You'd probably expect that they'd cherish these symbolic items forever, but to your surprise, at the end of the graduation ceremony, they all throw their graduation caps in the air!

We've (9) _____, but has it always been like this? As with most cultural norms, there is an origin story. The first cap throwing ceremony took place at the US Naval Academy in 1912, where students spent two years as 'midshipmen' before graduating and becoming naval officers. With the new title came a new hat for their uniforms. During the ceremony, the soon-to-be Navy officers were (10) _____. At this point, realising that their midshipmen hats were now unnecessary, the graduating class began tossing their old hats in the air in celebration.

This started the tradition at the US Naval Academy for every graduating class to symbolize the shedding of their midshipmen titles and preparing themselves for the role of naval officer. Other institutions began to follow the tradition, (11) _____ for starting a new chapter in a graduate's life.

This tradition may be expected (12) _____ in the future. Believe it or not, however, in recent years, there have been some schools where banning the century-old tradition has become the norm, due to the fact that the graduation cap isn't the softest of hats, and has (13) _____ over the years. The University of East Anglia, for example, has asked bare-headed graduates (14) _____, and then added the caps back to the photos with photoshop. As you can imagine, this has been met with some resistance, and the tradition is likely to continue for years to come.

B) to remain a part of academic culture

E) personalizing the tops of their graduation caps

THE STEAMBOAT LADIES

It wasn't very long ago that women were first given the opportunity to study at Trinity College Dublin, which may seem shocking for a school that now has an even ratio of male to female students.

Provost George Salmon allegedly promised that he would only let women into Trinity College "over his dead body", but his objections were overcome within a year of his death in 1904, and it was decided that there would be no viable reason to prevent women from gaining their degrees just as their male counterparts did. Coincidentally, the first woman to successfully register in the College, Isabel Marion Weir Johnston, did so on January 22nd, 1904, the same day former Provost Salmon died. Her entrance examinations even had to be put off because of his funeral.

Trinity College's policy on the admission of women was a progressive view at a time when women did not yet typically receive degrees. While they could technically sit their degree examinations at both Cambridge and Oxford, they would not be given the opportunity to receive their degrees. The lack of degrees meant that women did not earn the same qualification as men even if they took the same steps in university.

Trinity's differing policy on women led to a group called the "Steamboat Ladies", hundreds of women who decided to travel to Ireland to receive degrees from Trinity between 1904 and 1907. They were given this nickname due to their arrival on steamboats from the UK. Trinity College expected a small number of Oxbridge women to travel to Ireland for their degrees. However, between 1904 and 1907, 720 women from Oxford and Cambridge arrived with the aim to graduate. The ability to gain their degrees was invaluable for their professional status, especially if their aspirations led to teaching.

Although some of the women stayed a bit longer at Trinity College, many of them came over for just one night to participate in the graduation ceremonies. They took one day off, came on the overnight steamboat, stayed one night in Dublin, got their degrees the next day, and went back the following night.

0) Trinity College Dublin has a similar number of male and female students today.

15) George Salmon was fiercely against women being admitted to Trinity College.

16) The first woman to study at Trinity took her entrance exam while Provost Salmon was being buried.

17) Male students at Trinity College Dublin were opposed to women getting degrees there.

18) The fact that women could not graduate from Cambridge and Oxford did not mean that they could not study there.

19) It was Trinity College's equal rights policy that resulted in the movement of the "Steamboat Ladies".

20) It was only if a woman wanted a career in teaching that they could receive their degree in Oxford or Cambridge.

21) In order to prove they were qualified, women were required to take their degree examinations at Trinity the day before receiving their degree.

22) It was Trinity's practice to allow women to graduate that eventually convinced Oxford and Cambridge Universities to do the same.

THE HISTORY OF THE EDINBURGH TOOL LIBRARY

The Edinburgh Tool Library makes more than 2,000 tools available free of charge to Edinburgh residents. (0) _____

The inspiration for the library came when its founder, Chris Hellawell, came across a similar project in Canada. (23) _____ During his stay, he visited the Toronto Tool Library and met Ryan Dyment, one of the driving forces behind the project. "I picked up invaluable advice from Ryan, but what stuck with me most was an encounter with another visitor, a young man called Philippe, who was having a tough time. (24) _____ He was probably around the same age as me and I guess I could see something of myself in him," Chris says.

"To his credit, Philippe had found a job as a roofer and was due to start the following Monday. (25) _____ Nor did he have any money. Ryan ran through the set-up at the Library with Philippe and let him borrow what he needed, registering him as a temporary member. This meant Philippe was able to earn a wage, and in turn he then became a full member of the library. (26) _____ In an instant, his whole life had been transformed, and he wasn't far from tears," Chris remembers.

Before Toronto, Chris had understood the environmental case for tool sharing. (27) _____

Chris returned from Toronto determined to start Edinburgh's own Library. He established a board of trustees, and they applied for charitable status, which took longer than they had hoped. (28) _____ The board set up a staff team, built up the tool inventory through donations and raised public interest in the idea. Then, in March 2015, the UK's first tool library opened on Leith Walk, Edinburgh.

0)	C

A) Something as simple as access to tools had made a fundamental difference to a man facing the most challenging of times.

B) There he witnessed first-hand the positive environmental and social impacts a tool library can have on a community.

23)

~~C) ~~Since its opening in 2015, the library has saved its members over £1.3million by sharing instead of buying.~~~~

24)

D) Members were encouraged to provide their unused tools as part of their membership donation.

E) To do the job, he needed to find a hammer, Stanley knife, and tool belt, which he didn't have.

25)

F) After a long battle, they finally succeeded and managed to find funding organizations.

26)

G) Having access to tools is one thing, but it is important that people know how to use them.

H) He was broke and homeless, living on friends' sofas.

27)

I) On leaving the city, he also understood the social transformations and human impacts made possible through the sharing of resources.

K) He hopes that the charity will soon be able to open more locations across the city and offer the library service to more communities.

- There is an example (0) at the beginning.

WHY THE STATUE OF LIBERTY ALMOST DIDN'T GET BUILT

The (0) _____ (construct) of the Statue of Liberty was a (8) _____ (join) project between France and the United States. France was supposed to build the copper statue of a woman (9) _____ (raise) a torch, and the United States was supposed to build its pedestal.

But for a while, it wasn't clear if the statue would go up in New York City at all. When it arrived (in pieces) in New York Harbor in June 1885, the pedestal was still under construction, and the American Committee of the Statue of Liberty hadn't raised the (10) _____ (rough) $250,000 necessary to build it.

Most of the money the committee had raised so far had come in the form of donations from (11) _____ (wealth) Americans. There wasn't any federal funding for the pedestal, because the U.S. Congress couldn't agree on a spending package. There was a lot of (12) _____ (agree) over who should put up the money. In addition, New York Governor Grover Cleveland said that New York City couldn't use its city (13) _____ (govern) funds to pay for the pedestal. Other cities expressed interest in funding the pedestal – but this was understandably on the condition that the statue be (14) _____ (move) to their city.

Joseph Pulitzer, a Hungarian immigrant and rich newspaper (15) _____ (publish), was in favour of erecting the statue in New York City. On March 16, 1885, he asked readers of his newspaper the New York World to send in donations for the pedestal. Pulitzer succeeded: by August 1885, more than 120,000 people had helped to raise enough money.

PALAU'S WORLD-FIRST 'GOOD TRAVELLER' INCENTIVE

In a world-first initiative, visitors to Palau will be offered exclusive experiences (0) _____ on how they treat the environment and culture, rather (16) _____ on how much they spend.

Despite being home to fewer than 20,000 residents, the Republic of Palau is making a massive impact to preserve the planet. Not only (17) _____ the country adopt the world's first anti-nuclear constitution in 1979, but it also implemented the Palau Pledge in December 2017, (18) _____ requires international visitors to sign a pledge stamp in their passports that promises the children of Palau that they will "tread lightly" and "preserve and protect" the islands of Palau.

The idea for the Palau Pledge came about in 2015, (19) _____ which time tourism had reached 150,000 visitors annually, many of (20) _____ didn't understand how important sustainability was to residents. To combat this, Palau needed a way to educate travellers and (22) _____ them earn the privilege of being a friend. Resident Laura Clarke and Palauan Jennifer Koskelin-Gibbons launched a new programme called Ol'au Palau in 2020, which offers points to those who treat the island nation gently and respectfully by making sustainable decisions, (23) _____ as using environmentally-friendly sunscreen and eating locally produced food. Task 1

Your family is moving and you would like to get rid of some of your items you won't need in the future. You come across the following advertisement.

GARAGE SALE!

You don't have to throw away what you don't need anymore! Come to our garage sale on the first Sunday of every month, reserve a table for 10 euros, and let people fall in love with items you would otherwise throw away. Household items, outdoor furniture, tools, clothes, bags, furniture, old toys, electronics, and so much more. Bring and sell your stuff and support a good cause: we will use your table money (the money you've paid to reserve a table) to support a charitable organization of your choice.

City Dog Shelter – the place that takes care of and looks for responsible owners for cats and dogs lacking a home

Food Relief – the place that offers immediate food relief services to those in need

Christmas Box Operation – the organization that collects shoeboxes filled with love and toys at Christmas time

Want to reserve a table and/or have any questions? Contact Jake at jake@sellyourstuff.com.

Write an email of 120-150 words to Jake in which you

- write about what items you are planning to bring to sell,
- write about which charitable organization you would like to offer your table money to and why,
- ask about at least two practical details of the sale.

Begin your email like this:

Task 2

You have read the following post on the internet forum Family Matters:

Alison

I'm 19 and I have a little sister, Fran, who is nearly 13. She has a best friend, Claire, with whom she was inseparable until fourth grade. Then Math prodigy Claire was put into the advanced classes whereas Fran started working her way into the popular girls' group, extremely successfully – she has always been very sociable.

With her 13th birthday coming up Fran confidentially told me that she would ask our parents to let her go to a Taylor Swift concert in Manchester not far from our village. She wanted my support and asked if I could drive her there together with some other girls. It wasn't until I asked about the number of passengers I'll have that I realised that Claire was not among them. What's more, it turned out that Fran hadn't even asked her because the other girls persuaded her not to. 'That weirdo would only spoil the fun,' they said.

I found this really disappointing, a betrayal of their friendship, but she just shrugged and said that Claire would probably not enjoy a programme like this anyway and added: 'People change, and that's normal.'

Is it really? Still, it sounds quite heartless to me. I'd like to know what you think.

Write a comment of 200-250 words in which you say

- what being loyal to your friends means to you,
- whether it's normal for childhood friends to drift away from each other in their teens,
- if/how your friends influence your preferences and choices,
- if you have ever experienced or heard of anything like the problem described in the post.
